Philosophy of Teaching:

With the advancement of technology and widespread use of the Internet in teaching, I adopt the “Learner-Centered Approach” in my teaching, where students work in both groups and individuals to explore problems and become active learners rather than passive knowledge recipients. According to this strategy, learning is an active process where each learner constructs his own knowledge, not receive it passively from the instructor.

Moreover, learning happens through collaboration and interaction with other students and instructor. Accordingly, this approach will make utmost use of technology to support learner-centered teaching method.
